The essays deal with developments between 31 August 1957 and 31 August 1977 but in a few instances, editorial license has permitted the extension of that period to take into account more recent developments of some significance.

In this second edition the opportunity has been taken, with the assistance of the Government Printer, to include in a second volume reprints of the Constitutions of all the States. While these Constitutions are, at least in relation to those provisions based upon the Eighth Schedule to the Federal Constitution, substantially similar, there are occasional local variations justifying a separate reprint of these documents, which, buried in the pages of the State Gazettes, are often difficult to trace.

Since then dramatic changes had greatly affected the constitutional and legal fabric of the nation, thereby rendering the original version of the book virtually out of date, compounding the problem of the book itself being out of print. The three editors of this book thought it was fitting that the book be updated and revised, be given a new lease of life, and thereby rendering it as the most fitting legacy of this great towering personality to the country that he has served so admirably in his life-time. Despite the addition of three states to the federation in 1963, the secession of one in 1965 and continuous dangers of subversion from inside and outside the territory, constitutional democracy has survived under a governing instrument whose structure has retained the same identity from the inception of the independent Federation of Malaya to the Malaysia of today.

The Constitution of Malaysia / by L. A. Sheridan and Harry E. Groves. - 3 rd ed. - Singapore : Malayan Law Journal, 1979

The publication of the third edition of this work, the courts have had occasion to decide cases in areas that were still virgin in 1979; hence some of the commentary that was then speculative or prospective has been supplanted by the definitive pronouncements of the courts. The years between editions have also seen the retirement of Lord President Tun Mohamed Suffian.
